Disclaimer: I don’t own Mario, Luigi, Princess Peach, Morton, Roy or the Goombas/Ninjis since they are made by Nintendo. Adaptation loosely based on Hotel Mario game by Philips which they also made Rhinestone Goomba, Z-Koopa and other enemies plus the hotels.

Comments: After being controlled by the Meka Dragon, Robotnik and Professor Monkey-for-a-head, okay after writing an embarrassing parody; I have decided to write the 2nd Episode of Hotel Mario since Mario vs. Donkey Kong 2 is out and found even more pictures of the game. Did you know that Hotel Mario was one of the first games to use digital animation, about 4 years before any cartoons? Now on to the story.

Hotel Mario - Episode 2: Roy's Hard-Brick Hotel

Last time, Mario and Luigi had condemned Morton's WoodDoor-Hysteria Hotel and successfully rescued Princess Toadstool. Now Mario, Luigi and the Princess are walking along on a paved road in a forest after Luigi was scratching his head looking puzzled.

Luigi warned his brother, "There is a problem."

Suddenly as if the animators decided to change the plot, the paved road suddenly disappeared and without saying a word, Princess Toadstool climbed up an apple tree and reached towards the branches.

"Can you get me down Mario?” asked Princess Toadstool.

Mario replied, "While you're up there Princess, get me some delicious apples since I'm hungry."

Very carefully, the perky princess was grabbing an apple when suddenly she fell down off the branch and she waves her arms trying to fly but she failed and descended down towards the ground.

"Help, Mario or Luigi", Princess Toadstool screamed in a high pitch voice.

Out of nowhere, a yellow body Koopaling who had a pink head and wore sunglasses came running and stopped directly above the spot where the princess was falling which he caught very easily giving a smirk towards the plumbers.

Roy laughed, "You dumb plumbers don't know how to save princesses, dat's why I'm sending her to my hotel."

Quickly, Roy ran holding Princess Toadstool towards a building that looked like an imperial palace while the damsel in distress' hair kept changing colour between yellow and brown.

"Quit changing your hair colour", yelled Roy.

The pink headed Koopaling stopped when he had reached the nameless hotel, which the lights kept flickering between on and off due to a power surge and unexpectedly, started running up the wall instead of throwing her into the open window that was nearby. While the princess was fidgeting trying to move out, Roy Koopa ignored this and carried on walking towards the top floor.

Princess Toadstool asked, "How come you're running up the wall?"

"I dunno but if you say that again, you would get a fast punch", angrily replied Roy.

As the Koopaling and the princess reached the top floor of the hotel, back in the forest Mario and Luigi were looking around and only just noticed that Roy has kidnapped the princess. The green plumber scratched his head by removing his hat which he placed back on as his brother was munching on an apple.

Luigi scarefully asked, "How are we going to find Princess Toadstool with the hotel over there having a powerful power surge?"

The red-hatted Italian plumber quickly faced towards a possible audience ready to give advice as his eyes moved very slowly and took a deep breath.

"Turning off light switches saves electricity and money, Mario says!", shouted Mario in a Brooklyn accent instead of his faux-Italian one.

As soon as the famous Nintendo mascot finished his line, the Italian plumbing brothers quickly ran towards the hotel which suddenly they froze their running position and they were stiff.

Luigi asked without moving his lips, "Why aren't we moving?"

"Something happened and have to wait until we are at the door or inside the hotel, I don't really know", explained Mario.

After a while, the plumbers were warped into Roy's Hard-Brick Hotel that unlike Morton's hotel, looked like a level from Elevator Action with basic white walls and brown doors despite looking like luxury on the outside. The red-hatted plumber looked at the hotel and noticed something strange.

Mario asked, "How come there were one hundred doors in the last hotel and only twelve around here?"

"Beats me, but the music from the speakers above was not as catchy as Morton's hotel", replied Luigi referring to the background music.

The green-hatted plumber noticed that there were two Goombas on the ground floor so he and his brother jumped on the duo and collected the coins that came out. Mario then slammed the two doors very quickly and jumped on the elevator that had a green arrow pointing up while the green-hatted Italian plumber followed him towards the first floor which patrolling the hallway was one lonely Goomba which it screamed as soon as Mario ground pounded the enemy. Luigi slammed doors three and five which he jumped into a elevator pointing up while his brother slammed door four.

Suddenly a power surge took place in the hotel causing everything to go black and something weird as happened to the famous Italian plumber.

Mario sighed, "Thanks to this power surge, I am moving very sluggish for no reason."

After ten seconds, the power has been restored except one minor detail, the elevator that Luigi jumped on pointing up was changed to a red arrow pointing down causing the green-hatted plumber to go back to the ground floor instead of the second floor.

"What the macaroni?” asked Luigi while holding his hands out.

As the younger brother got onto the elevator to get back to the first floor, Mario was on the second floor as he perfectly timed to go to the elevator before the switch and saw a Para-Bomb that looked like a black Bob-omb just with a parachute so the Italian plumber picked up the enemy and aimed towards a Ninji which successfully blew up both enemies as Luigi just arrived at the floor.

Mario jokefully spoke, "That was a blast, let's shut the doors before there is another power surge."

So Mario closed both doors and his brother Luigi got hold of another elevator taking him to the third floor which he closed all three doors as quickly as possible. Suddenly another power surge came turning out the power as the plumbing duo saw the lights flicker. After the power outage, the red-hatted plumber got on the elevator to the fourth floor and his brother did the same thing. Looking fed up and bored, both plumbers slammed the doors and dusted their hands knowing that all the doors are closed except for an open window.

"Should we close that open window?” scarefully asked Luigi.

Mario replied, "No, it looks like an electricity room over there."

Very quickly, the Mario Brothers squeezed through the open window and noticed that in the kitchen there were fifty toasters plugged into the wall socket as both plumbers looked shocked that one person would have fifty toasters in a kitchen.

"Who on their right mind would have fifty toasters plugged in?" asked the green-hatted plumber.

The red-hatted plumber replied, "I can understand one or maybe two, but fifty is insane."

Slowly the plumbing duo walked towards the kitchen worktop and saw a loaf of bread on the chopping board.

Luigi asked, "What is that Mario?"
"It's Bowser's Sourpuss Bread!" exclaimed Mario.
"Sourpuss?"
"It's made of soda."
"Oh."

As soon as they looked at the sell by date and threw the loaf into the bin, Mario turned his head towards the possible audience holding the other loaf of "Bowser's Sourpuss Bread" with his hands.

The Italian plumber yelled in a Brooklyn accent, "As the saying goes, all toasters toast toast!"

"That's a bad line and you know it", angrily pointed Luigi at the loaf of bread.

So the famous plumber threw the second loaf into the bin and looked at the wall socket putting his finger on his chin thinking of how to unplug the thing. His brother pointed towards a sign that said "Prise Principale" which roughly translates as master plug. As Luigi was scratching his head why was the sign in French, Mario unplugged the "prise principale" which suddenly the power surges have stopped and the hotel glowed brighter than before.

Mario smiled and happily shouted, "Call me Mario the Electrician."

"You're a plumber, Mario", replied Luigi in a monotone voice.

As soon as the green plumber finished the sentence, both brothers opened and closed the kitchen door and walked up some stairs until they found a Dumb Waiter that they pulled up towards the rooftop of the hotel and noticed a sign that said, "Roy's Rowdy Roof-top".

Out of nowhere a voice shouted, "Koopa man, Koopa man, super amazing Koopa man!"

Very quickly both plumbers looked around trying to find out where the noise was coming from until they looked above at the ceiling to find an Anorexic Roy Koopa hanging on a rail.

"Since when did Roy Koopa lose weight, he was always bulky?" wondered Luigi.

The red Italian plumber whispered to his brother, "While you bonk Bully's head, I would close all the doors, got it?"

As the green-hatted plumber nodded, the pink-headband wearing Koopaling came heading towards the ground which Luigi ground pounded him. Very quickly, Mario slammed all the doors in the first three layers of the rooftop and got up towards the fourth layer that Roy put his fist into his hand when behind him the younger Mario Brother jumped on his head. As soon as possible, the red plumber slammed all the doors of the fourth layer of the rooftop. Since the Koopaling was rubbing his head, the plumbing duo slammed each door at the last layer causing Roy to fall out of the hotel and landed into a sand pit at the back of the hotel.

Mario bellowed out, "I guess Roy has that sinking feeling."

"Quit the puns, it is giving me a headache", replied Luigi.

The next morning, the plumbing duo got out a big wooden sign that said "Condemned" with a signature of the Mario Brothers on the front which they very rapidly hammered the nails into the double door entrance.

The famous Italian plumber shouted, "This hotel is condemned by the Mario Brothers!"

"Yeah," happily replied his younger brother.

Notes: There, took longer than I hoped but at least it is out before the European release of Mario vs. Donkey Kong 2. Next episode is in Larry's hotel and expect something strange there too. Despite written on a bad day, Hotel Mario will continue very soon.